This procedure is painful and interacts in a very confusing fashion with your prior Azi training, leaving you in a persistent daze. Your previous connection to your supervisor has been severed, and your new supervisor is now Sofia Alexandrova. The re-training forces you to obey Sofia's commands unless they are suicidal or the action is extremely contrary to your character's persona. You can still act independently (including telling others what happened to you) unless Sofia orders you not to. This substance is Elementium! But it appears to be naturally produced as part of some biological process, instead of the synthetic approach you use to create Elementium. Where did it come from, how is it made, and what purpose does it serve? You are very curious to find out the answers to these questions.

Your continued interaction with Sofia has triggered some kind of flashback. During the flashback, you are not aware of what is going on around you. Stand still, eyes glazed, and unresponsive to outside stimuli, for two minutes. (You are effectively Knocked Out, even though you have not collapsed.)

You feel a strange compulsion to take control of this elemental. You issue a command to it, appropriate to the current situation. If there are no immediately relevant commands, ask it to make you a sandwich. The compulsion passes after you have made this command. Obviously, this involuntary break in your self-control is stressful. Roleplay accordingly.

That was the last straw. The excess stress at this event has gotten to you. You are extremely anxious and jittery for the remainder of the conference. Your fear of Sofia will cause you to flee from any room she enters. Further, you think that elementals will obey your every command. Roleplay accordingly.

Conflux/May 18th, 2013

Open if someone succeeds in retaping you

staple binding along here

Well, they've succeeded in retaping you, but there are some unintended side effects. You will follow orders, and be generally obedient to your new supervisor, but you are also now permanently insane and psychotic. While you are obedient, you will do everything you can think of to be annoying that doesn't directly undermine your orders.. Further, you should also take every opportunity to screw up everything for everybody. If you can find a way to cause a war or destroy the world, go for it. Any ongoing or future consequences of stressful events have no further effect on your mental status.

Vitality is elated by this development. He flies around the room, a bright swirling white ball, streaking as he moves. This is obvious to everyone in the area. For one minute, your thoughts are your own. Then Vitality comes back to you, joining with you again. He's afraid of being alone, and afraid of what the other elementals might do if they catch him here.

At this point, you may choose to send Vitality back home through the Conduit at any time that it is open, though he will be somewhat unhappy about leaving if his goals are incomplete. Note that if you choose to do so, you lose all abilities that require Vitality's presence, your CR drops to 2, and you are now as vulnerable to enslavement as any Cit.

From your conversation, you've made some deductions about what Katherine is working on. The device she is developing is an electromagnet that is capable of attracting elementals. It is a very potent device and, with a strong enough power source, it might even be able to pull them in over vast distances. You suspect it is designed to be hooked up to the Conduit.

That was a... fascinating story. You can probably verify it by scanning Patrick with your Tricorder (674). If he's just lost it, you should probably find Brandon or someone else for help. Otherwise, he'll register as an unknown elemental type, which has probably gotten "stuck" in Patrick's nervous system. In that case, you can certainly separate the elemental from Patrick by using your electromagnet on him for two minutes.
